Dr. Matthew Sowcik

Dr. Matthew Sowcik is an Associate Professor in Leadership Studies and the Chair of the Department of Entrepreneurship, Leadership Studies and Marketing at Wilkes University, where he has worked professionally for the past 12 years. Dr. Sowcik teaches courses in Advanced Leadership, Opportunity Identification: Creativity and Innovation, The Entrepreneurial Leader, Leadership and Film, on the undergraduate and graduate level. Matthew’s research specialization is in humility, leadership evaluation and the emergence and sustainability of Leadership Studies programs. Aside from his research and administrative duties, Dr. Sowcik also currently serves as a consultant to The New York Times, focusing on the newspaper’s educational programming for leadership studies faculty and students.

Dr. Sowcik was the lead editor for the book, Leadership 2050: Critical Challenges, Key Contexts and Emerging Trends, which was a collaborative effort with the International Leadership Associations Building Leadership Bridges book series. In addition to the book, Dr. Sowcik has published numerous papers influencing the way we think about leadership evaluation and assessment including:

